City of Yorkton partners with Access Communications in Water Park Naming Rights Agreement

Yorkton, SK – The City of Yorkton, in partnership with Access Communications Co-operative, has announced today that the Water Park at the Gallagher Centre will now be known as the Access Communications Water Park.

As part of the partnership, the Gallagher Centre will feature free Access Communications public Wi-Fi Internet service throughout the facility. People are more digitally connected than ever and state-of-the-art public Wi-Fi access enables visitors to more easily connect and interact online.

“Our technology is helping families laugh, students learn, businesses grow, and connecting Saskatchewan people with each other and the world,” said Jim Deane, Chief Executive Officer, Access Communications Co-operative. “We are proud to help the communities we serve. With the Gallagher Centre being a Yorkton community hub, our partnership is a great fit.”

“Our new partnership with Access Communications means we will be able to provide the best in Wi-Fi Internet service to patrons throughout the entire Gallagher Centre complex. We look forward to this new working relationship,” said Mayor Bob Maloney.

The Water Park at the Gallagher Centre includes features found in very few similar facilities located in the prairies and is a draw for families not only in Yorkton, but the entire Parkland Area. Amenities include a wave pool with zero-depth beach entry, 25-meter instructional pool, whirlpool, lazy river, two story waterslide, party room, sauna and steam rooms, plus a two-story climbing wall.
